Portal Decisions: Follow-up

A few answers to settle before we continue building

Three people filled in the portal question form: you, a business development consultant, and a product specialist who does most of the Canon and Epson deal registrations. Your answers were used as the decisions.

On the questions below, the other two answered differently. Their day-to-day experience matters, so please read their answers and make the final call. Tick one choice for each question, or write your own.

Everything not listed here stays as you decided. Most of your answers matched at least one other person.

1. The other two agree with each other, but not with you

For these three questions, the other two people gave the same answer, and it is different from yours.

1. When should the portal go live?

What it means: Whether we start using the portal before price history is ready. Price history means keeping every old price with its dates, so we always know which price applied when.

Your answer: Wait until price history is ready too.

Business development consultant and product specialist: Go live once registration, review, and withdrawal work.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer: wait for price history

☐ Go live without waiting for price history

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

2. What if two partners register the same deal at exactly the same moment?

What it means: Who gets first place when both registrations arrive at the same time. This is very rare: the portal records the time down to a fraction of a second.

Your answer: They share the same rank, and DBGI decides.

Business development consultant and product specialist: The registration with better documents wins.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer: same rank, DBGI decides

☐ The registration with better documents wins

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

3. How do we count working days?

What it means: Only for deadlines written as working days, for example "reply within one working day". Periods like 30, 60, or 90 days are always counted as calendar days.

Your answer: Monday to Friday, without Philippine holidays, with a 5:00 PM cutoff.

Business development consultant and product specialist: Just count calendar days.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer: Monday to Friday, no holidays, 5:00 PM cutoff

☐ Count calendar days

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

2. All three answers are different

Each person gave a different answer to these two questions.

4. Can partners change a deal after they submit it?

What it means: Today a partner can edit any time. If DBGI already confirmed the deal, DBGI checks it again, and the deal keeps its place in line.

Your answer: Small fixes any time; big changes go back to DBGI for checking.

Business development consultant: Keep how it works today.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): Only when DBGI asks for changes.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer: small fixes any time, big changes checked again

☐ Keep how it works today

☐ Only when DBGI asks for changes

☐ Something else (write below)

Note: If you keep your answer, please confirm what counts as small. Suggestion: contact details and descriptions are small; the end-user, products, quantities, and prices are big.

Notes: _____

_____

5. How long is an approved special price good for?

What it means: The number of days a price DBGI approved stays valid, and when the partner gets a reminder before it ends. Partners can still ask to renew it for 30 more days.

Your answer: 90 days, reminder 14 days before it ends.

Business development consultant: 60 days, reminder 7 days before.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): 45 days.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer: 90 days, reminder 14 days before

☐ 60 days, reminder 7 days before

☐ 45 days, reminder 7 days before

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

3. Already built: please confirm the number of days

These two rules already work in the portal, using your answers. The product specialist suggested something different, so please confirm or change them.

6. How long can a deal wait for DBGI to confirm it?

What it means: Built today: after 53 days the partner gets a reminder; after 60 days the deal goes back to DBGI for review. It is never rejected automatically.

Your answer: 60 days, reminder 7 days before, then DBGI reviews.

Business development consultant: Same as yours.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): 3 months would be better.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep 60 days

☐ Change to 90 days (3 months)

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

7. What happens when a tender is postponed or posted again?

What it means: Built today: when DBGI puts a project on hold, the partners keep their place in line for 60 days, get a reminder, and then DBGI reviews the deals.

Your answer: Same rule as the question above: 60 days, then DBGI reviews.

Business development consultant: A reposted tender starts a new race.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): A reposted tender keeps the original place in line (no time limit mentioned).

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer: keep the place for 60 days, then DBGI reviews

☐ Keep the place with no time limit

☐ A reposted tender starts a new race

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

4. New ideas from the product specialist

The product specialist suggested these. Please say yes or no.

8. Repeat orders: how does a partner ask for the same special price again?

What it means: A repeat order is when the same government buyer buys more of the same item from the same supplier without a new bidding.

Your answer: Same end-user, and the NOA and NTP must say it is a repeat order. Otherwise DBGI declines.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): The partner first registers it in the portal, marks it "Repeat order", and enters the code of the original approved registration. The proof is the end-user's purchase order.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my rule only

☐ My rule, plus his step: register it in the portal with the original registration code

☐ His rule: the end-user's purchase order is enough proof

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

9. Should DBGI reviewers also get emails?

What it means: Already decided: emails go only to the partner who submitted the deal. DBGI staff see their tasks inside the portal.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): Also email DBGI reviewers when something needs their action.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Yes, email DBGI reviewers too

☐ No, the portal is enough for DBGI

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

10. Should "Evidence" be called "Attachment"?

What it means: The section where partners upload files and describe their proof of the deal.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): Use "Attachment" instead of "Evidence".

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Yes, call it "Attachment"

☐ No, keep "Evidence"

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

11. Is the status name "Changes requested" clear?

What it means: The status a partner sees when DBGI sends the deal back for corrections.

Business development consultant: It is confusing.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): The status names are clear.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep "Changes requested"

☐ Rename it to "Needs your update"

☐ Rename it to "Returned for changes"

☐ Something else (write below)

Notes: _____

_____

12. Who sets the backup and recovery targets?

What it means: How long records are kept, how often backups run, and how fast the portal must be back after a problem.

Your answer: Keep records 5 years, back up daily, be back within one working day.

Product specialist (does most Canon and Epson registrations): Let IT set the targets.

Your final decision (tick one):

☐ Keep my answer

☐ Let IT set the targets

☐ Something else (write below)
